This book is about the classic Aladdin and Princess Jasmine tale. It starts out Aladdin's usual antics in the bustling marketplace of Agrabah like any other day. However, as readers will find out, this day takes a wicked turn when Aladdin finds the lamp of wishes, but instead of using it, he loses it! Read more to find out what happens!

This book was very fun to read and I am glad to know that there are other books similar to this one in the author's series. It was also fun to just see how the events would turn out in an already known and loved story that was changed by the author. I think she did a fabulous job at tickling people's imaginations and possibly restarting them through this book. My two favorite characters of the book were Abu the monkey and, of course, Aladdin. Their relationship was held throughout the whole book, and Abu's tiny, insignificant actions which added to the book were just too funny to not love.

I would definitely recommend this book to everyone. Especially though, I think the younger readers will enjoy this book. I think they will because their youths were probably filled with fairy tales from Disney and other companies that promote mass creativity, so this book can really help expand much more imagination, even when one moment changes everything, just like the theme of the book! Happy Reading!
