

Name: Anonymous

School: El Dorado High School

Grade: 11

Book Title: All Better Now

Author: Neal Shusterman

Rating: 4.5 out of 5

This book follows mainly 3 point of views, of 3 very different characters who all intertwine at the center of a deadly disease that makes the infected unable to experience negative human emotion. As each character comes from a separate place entirely, the story and overarching themes connect them together at the peak of the disease.

I really enjoyed this book. Like a lot. As soon as I read the summary I was instantly hooked, and borrowed it immediately. I loved the plot of the disease and how creative it was, while also being a note that negative emotions are what make us human. The characters were also great - and the way each one tied into the plot so well was such a satisfying transition through while reading. The characters all seem distant at the start, but slowly get wrapped up into the same cohesive storyline and the ending they are all present in, and play an important role. That was the best part for me- the ending! All the plot parts, and characters and other story adjacent increments were tied together very well in a nice satisfying ending in this novel. It's been a little hard to keep this spoiler free, but I really recommend this book! It was an interesting read that I found myself coming back to finish at my convenience, and I was not let down by the ending!